the wish to murder is always carried out, or else that the opportunities, as well as the documents, return by fixed rule.

Under this view, before these murder-statistics can be as complete, and as to establish periodicity in the will, we want impossible returns of unfilled intentions; a schedule is needed of the dark night, the lonely journeys, and unguarded chambers which favoured the commission of the deed; supplementary list would be desirable of the annual quarrels, the jealousies, the controversies, the broils; and all these statistics must disclose the same corresponding totals year by year! A murder implies an intention and an opportunity, and even granting that these things follow antecedents unalterably, the argument further requires a belief in the coincidence of the one with the other, so that the statistics of the latter shall be accepted as standing as the former. Take the case of an attempted murder which is never completed, the coincidence that occurrence has to be shown and murder. But it would be a falsification of police sheets for it to be similarly interested; yet does not the hypothesis in question assume that the returns agree? In reference to suicide, the same remark might be made; the case of the murders; the statistics, to be objected, whatever else they prove, are regular to establish uniformity of mind. For instance, it is admitted that suicide is less contingent occurrence than murder; and has the carrying out of an intention to kill himself more at his own disposal than that of destroying another; in the one case, it is supposed, is not so liable to be baffled as in the other, but strange to say the statistics in both instances are just equally regular.

In reality, suicide is found just as practical as murder, and murder as suicide, neither more or less; it is equally easy to predict returns in both cases—the disturbing element, however, never disturbs, the figures are as precise and constant. It does almost seem an exact argument for the occasion; the proof is so unexceptionable that it becomes superfluous; in ordinary matters we are not used to such over perfect logic.

Now turn to the case of marriages, and here it is urged, from the fact of men and women marrying virtually by licence of the quarter, that "three unions are determined by the temper and wishes of individuals, by large general factors over which individuals can exercise no control." What does the fact of people not marrying say to imply? We can scarcely imagine that we want to enjoy the pleasures of wedded life, and falls with the price of bread; but we are pointed to a power of control, of kind, establishing persons, despite their wishes, postpone marriage against their inclination; ordinary speech, we should say, at times depressed state, refrained from marriage by effort of the will; but then that is the very essence of the will, is only the operation of prudence self enactive? The overbearing sentence we quote above lies, we think, in the fact that because it is admitted the number of marriages is fixed by the selling value of the market, it is assumed that the existence of love likings is so too. Ah, Mary and John postpone their marriage when the price of bread is high, and they are not to be blamed; but they suspend their loving—we even question whether the kissing stops till the loaf goes back to eightpence. The marriage statistics, however, valuable for social purposes, are, we feel, a little spiritually.

Lastly, a word as to the striking quanta made from the Post Office returns, denoting the possibility of predicting what portion of the writers of letters this year will forget to direct them, and drop blank envelopes into the post. These statistics undoubtedly to show something mechanic in the operation of the memory, but the will

That beautiful situated FARM and EXTENSIVE ORCHARD and GARDEN, with homestead, &c., comprising 54 ACRES, extending from Burns' Bay to the Tamboon Bay Road, well known as the property of F. E. G. Croft, Esq., and of the celebrated property of the late Mr. George Walford.

PRELIMINARY NOTICE.
RICHARDSON AND WRENCH have received instructions from the mortgagee, to sell by public auction, at the Rooms, Pitt-street, on MONDAY, 14th November, at 11 o'clock.

The above described property, on BURNS' BAY, LANE COVE.

It comprises three grants as follows:—
LOT 1.—50 ACRES, on which are the improvements.

LOT 2.—The balance of the land, containing 10 acres under cultivation, and planted with about 1500 FRUIT TREES, of the choicest descriptions, which, together with the vineyard, were specially selected by Mr. Croft, and are of the highest quality.

The houses contain 4 rooms and large attic, and command a fine view of the water of Lane Cove, and the surrounding scenery. There is also a kitchen, servants' room, stable, and other out-offices.

LOTS 3 and 4 contain 30 acres and 34 acres, the latter fronting Burns' Bay.

This property is worthy of attention, as it will be positively sold. The estate has been planted 7 years, and most of the trees are in full bearing. The plan of the property may be inspected at the Rooms, and an inspection is invited prior to the sale.

The above described choice block of land at Enfield, Burwood.

DISTRICT OF ALBURY.
That truly magnificent Country Property, situated on the banks of the Murrumbidgee and well-known as THE HERMITAGE ESTATE.

This, unquestionably. Terms at sale.

MORT AND CO. have received instructions from the proprietor, David Reid, Esq., to sell by public auction, at the Rooms, Pitt-street, on FRIDAY, 11th November, at a quarter to 11 o'clock.

That choice property.

THE HERMITAGE ESTATE.
New South Wales, about 16 miles from ALBURY, the termination of the Victorian Railway.

It is situated on the banks of the MURUMBIDGEE RIVER, and contains about 4000 acres, and is all enclosed with a most substantial fence; 200 acres, subdivided into four paddocks of 50 acres each, are cleared and now under the reed of the land is of a rich alluvial character.

Upon the estate is erected a MOST SUBSTANTIAL FAMILY RESIDENCE, built of granite and shingled roof, with verandah, and balcony 65 feet in length, 10 feet wide, and 9 feet high, and contains hall, drawing, dining, and best bedroom, each 15 x 20, and six other rooms, 16 x 11 and 12 x 10, with room fitted up like a billiard room; also most commodious cellars, 60 x 30, capable of storing 50,000 GALLONS OF WINE.

The materials throughout the building are of the very best, the joiners' work being of the best; the out-offices, which are unusually superior and commodious, are built of stone, of granite, and shingled roof, and comprise kitchen, two servants' rooms, servants' hall, laundry, store room and a large office room. Also stabling for four horses, coach-house, and harness room, with hayrack over all. The dairy, a separate building, also 16 x 10, is very compact; excellent stockyards, milking yards, and barn.

Surrounding the house is a capital garden of 4 acres, all enclosed with a substantial pale fence, and well stocked with choice fruit trees, including AN ORCHARD OF BOTH HALF-PIED APPLES, now in full bearing. The property throughout is in thorough order, and is now worked by the proprietor.

It is seldom that so choice a country property is in the market for sale, and an opportunity is directed to the sale as affording an opportunity for securing a really

FIRST-CLASS ESTATE.
A large area of the land is peculiarly adapted for vine-growing; the rest is a rich alluvial soil. One-third of the estate is already under crop, the remainder only awaits the cutting of a small amount.

YIELD A GOLDEN RETURN.
The view from the balcony can scarcely be described and is too beautiful to be written.

UNPARALLELED IN THE COLONY.
It commands nearly 100 MILES OF THE RIVER MURUMBIDGEE, and the view is a most beautiful one.

Added to these advantages are the simple means of communication, distant only 16 miles from ALBURY, coach-road, and the railway, within 3 miles of the house, and the river navigable to the property.

Inspection is invited, ample time being afforded, prior to the sale.

In the immediate vicinity of William Cunningham, grocer.

H. VAUGHAN AND SON have received instructions from the official assignee in the above estate to sell by auction, on FRIDAY, 11th November, at noon, on the premises, near St. Peter's Church, Cook's River Road.

Two houses, with out-offices and garden, and sundries.

TWO HOUSES, SOUTH END OF CUMBERLAND-STREET.

T. W. BOWDEN will sell by auction, at the Rooms, Pitt-street, on FRIDAY, 11th November, at 11 o'clock.

A block of land, on the west side of Cumberland-street, a little to the north of Church-street, having a frontage of 50 feet, and a depth of 100 feet, and is all enclosed with a substantial fence, and is situated in the neighborhood as the property of Mr. Thomas DUNN, and is now under the management of Mr. DUNN.

The south side of which is sufficient land for the erection of another house.

This is a desirable property. Terms at sale.

A Plan on view at the Auction Rooms.

PRELIMINARY NOTICE.
GREAT AND UNRESERVED SALE OF 3500 ACRES OF ARABLE LAND, NEAR WINDSOR.

T. W. BOWDEN has been favoured with instructions from the Proprietor of the above Estate to sell by auction, on the ground, a few days after the opening of the railway to Windsor and Richmond.

THE WHOLE of that valuable property recently surveyed and subdivided into 3500 acres, suitable for agricultural purposes, vineyards, orchards, and for grazing, and is situated in the County of Cumberland; and, being free from incumbrances, is a most desirable property for sale. The land is situated on the north side of the railway, and is divided into 3500 acres, and is all enclosed with a substantial fence, and is situated in the neighborhood as the property of Mr. Thomas DUNN, and is now under the management of Mr. DUNN.

VILLA ALLOTMENTS AT LONGBOY, NEAR THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH, FRONTING THE WHARF ROAD.
FIN AND CHICKEN BAY.

T. W. BOWDEN has been instructed by the Executors of the late H. Brett, Esq., to sell by auction, at the Land Sale Rooms, 154, Pitt-street, THIS DAY, the 10th of November, at 11 o'clock.

Several villa allotments, varying in extent from two to seven acres, at Longboy, near to Burwood, on the road to the wharf in Fin and Chicken Bay, being a continuation of Burwood-street from the Railway Station, crossing the Parramatta Road at Welch's public-house, leaving the Episcopal Church on the right hand, and the schoolhouse on the left.

Five of the allotments lying on the right hand side of the road going to the wharf at the end of the point, run down to high water mark, or nearly so, the purchasers of which might greatly increase the area of their lot by filling in the space between high and low water mark.

The other eight allotments comprise 256, 1r. and are so divided that a purchaser can take any number in one block. All of them have valuable sites for the erection of villas, and command good views of the large sheet of water fronting that portion of the bay, and of the many cottage residences on the other side. Stanley, Orange, and Burwood streets are boundaries of most of the lots. Several of them front the main road leading to the residence of Messrs. Dryden, Grahame, Watson, and others.

The whole has been recently surveyed, the boundaries of the lots marked near to the road, the north partly cut down to show the bearing of the lines, and the words of the day of sale will be seen on the plan.

Intending purchasers visiting the place will have no difficulty in finding out the lots, but a previous inspection of the plan at the Rooms, would be desirable.

The plans immediately adjoining will show how well the land is suited for such a purpose.

Day of sale, Thursday, November 10.
Terms—25 per cent. cash, and the balance by bills at 3, 6, and 9 months, with interest.

Swamp Land, for Market Garden, Ferry Hills, with Dry Building Ground.

T. W. BOWDEN will sell by auction, at the Land Sale Rooms, 154, Pitt-street, THIS DAY, the 10th of November, at 11 o'clock.

A block of land, fenced in, and subdivided into allotments of about one acre each, on the north-east side of Stanley-street, at the corner of the road leading to the residence of Messrs. Dryden, Grahame, Watson, and others.

The road now runs by the south boundary of the land, and is a most desirable site for the erection of a villa, and is well known as the property of Mr. Thomas DUNN, and is now under the management of Mr. DUNN.

The whole has been recently surveyed, the boundaries of the lots marked near to the road, the north partly cut down to show the bearing of the lines, and the words of the day of sale will be seen on the plan.

No. XXIII

however, did not prevent our seeing the greater part of the extensive pile. Though not an old building it is much decayed and injured, but it shows very beautiful Saracenic work in porcelains, baths, fountains, and marble mosaics. The walls of the floor of Beyrout say the patterns and execution of the Babelian mosaic are superior to, and more varied and elegant than the best things of the kind in Venice, not excepting even the flooring of St. Mark's.

The bath rooms were considerably finer than any other thing of the kind I saw in the East, excepting one or two of the principal houses in Damascus; they were entirely of mosaic in marble everywhere, except under each fountain, where porcelain tiles of a very fine make were used. There were plants—oranges, lemons, roses, &c.—growing in every room, except the hottest, and fountains trickling and playing everywhere; and the large siesta hall was divided down the middle by slender clustered columns, supporting a hundred vaultings.

May 7th.—We did not cross the gorge to Deir el Kamr. It presents indeed little more than a mass of blackened ruins, and is almost deserted. Starting at 11 a.m., we rode northwards along the valley, still going with merry songs, and the houses mostly ruined, then crossed a desert and stony ridge, and opened up a picturesque Alpine valley backed by a lofty crest of Lebanon glittering with snow. Vines now abounded on the terraces as well as mulberries. I could not help being surprised at the number of villages we saw, for in such a rugged country it is not easy to understand how so many people can find sustenance. While winding in single file along the very bad roads of this beautiful region we had many cordial salutations from the Druze villagers, but no further demonstration as at Ennabl. About seven miles from Bteldain we reached Burak, a village surrounded by walnut and mulberry trees, in a fine glen along which rushed the torrent of the Awaly. Much of the water was diverted from its original bed and led along the hill sides in aqueducts for the purpose of irrigation. Crossing the valley, we passed on our way a curious outburst of iron ore, we toiled up the bare and stony backbone of Lebanon, and reached the crest a little before noon. Here we got among large patches of snow; the air, however, was not cold, the thermometer being 62; and among the scanty greenward between the glistening snow-wreaths we found some pretty flowers. While descending the eastern side of the ridge by a steep zig-zag path we had below us the broad valley called Kd Bukaa, green, except where newly ploughed,—the line of junction between the green plain and the brown mountains being sharply defined. The great ridge of Antilebanon stood before us, and Hermon rose grandly on the right, with its shining crest of snow. It took us two hours to get down the ridge, then twenty minutes more of hilly ground before reaching the plain; and two miles further our tents were pitched on the green banks of the Litahay, close to a bridge of thirteen small arches. Our path across the plain was with round lumps of calcareous clay. At the foot of the ridge there was a clump of poplars, and a mound of rubbish containing fragments of pottery, together with solitary base of a round pillar. About half a mile beyond the river stood a village called Jubb Jenin. It had been attacked by the Druzes in the previous year and left half in ruins. When our dragomen went up to buy some milk, eggs and fowls, the women of the place said they had none—that their husbands and fathers had been killed, and that they possessed little but the clothes they wore. We noticed large herds of cattle on the west side of the river, but they belonged probably to Druze villagers.

May 8th.—Got up at dawn as usual, and were off by seven o'clock. We crossed the bridge, defiled past the village, and then up the slope of Antilebanon. In two hours we reached a green and pretty valley, in the heart of the stony mountains; and another hour brought us to Aitay, a village inhabited chiefly by Maronites, and now nearly in ruins. The people told us that when the Druzes came upon them, they fled to Zahleh; the village was plundered, and about forty killed of those that had remained. The people make a living here partly by the manufacture of pottery. From this we continued our way over hill and dale through a rather bare country, with, however, an occasional patch of verdure, till about five miles from Aitay we got into a narrow rocky gorge, and had then no better road for a considerable distance than the story bed of a winter torrent. After leaving this we passed near to Deir el A-bayhir, where are ruins of a large temple—one of the numerous sanctuaries that once envenomed Mount Hermon. These temples, Dr. Robinson says, "are found in all situations; crowning hills and mountain tops, or secluded in valleys and deep gorges." The founders and worshippers have disappeared for unknown ages, whether they were Pagan, Aitay, or Chaco-Syri; we cannot tell; they have left behind no trace but their own works, and no record to show how or why these works were erected."

About three miles further on we joined the highway from Beyrout to Damascus; a wretched road we found it, and yet posts were being put up to support a telegraph wire. From the fountain of Meithelan (at the junction) the tracklay for some distance along the bed of a stream between cliffs of conglomerate rock; then we turned off to the left and ascended to the village of Dimas, where our tents were pitched. This is a dreary place—a miserable village on a bleak mountain, the view all round being still more bleak. Our ride had lasted about eight hours, exclusive of the muddy rest—much the same as on the two previous days.

May 9th.—We had a wild night on the mountain—strong squalls of wind and rain, with vivid lightning and thunder. One of the tents came down close; mine was laid open, but by holding on to the windward side, the rain prevented it being carried away entirely. The morning broke very gloomy and dismal, but it cleared into a bright windy day. Being eager for an early sight of Damascus we were off by six o'clock, leaving the wet tents and baggage to follow. In less than an hour we got upon the dreary plain called Sahra, which we crossed in an hour (about four miles). "Nowhere in Syria," says our Handbook, "is there a more desolate region." Not a village, nor a tree, nor a patch of verdure appears within the range of vision, though the eye sweeps a district containing nearly a hundred square miles. A range of white naked hills bounds the plain on the south-east; lofty naked grey mountains rise up in long steep slopes to the right and left behind us. The only feature in this vast panorama is Hermon, which towers up, a beautiful snow-capped cone, at the south-eastern end of the plain. About six miles westward is the beautiful gap containing a tributary of the Barada, hidden among the dense foliage of willows, poplars, peach, walnut, fig, Hawthorn, and other trees. Following down this stream for an hour we reached the Barada itself, a good-sized river, rushing and tumbling over a rocky bed; it is held to be identical with the Abana of the Old Testament; the Chrysothraos ("Golden-flowing") of the Greeks and Romans. In half an hour we crossed the river by a stone bridge at a lovely spot and rode on through a rich canopy of green leaves over lush and pretty hills and cascades of water at our feet. Soon, however, we left the verdant glen and ascended a steep bare hill of waste limestone. From a little distance the crest of the hill (about two miles from the bridge) we obtained the famous view of Damascus which travellers have viewed with each other in extolling. And truly it is worth going a long way to see; though I must acknowledge that in regard to the city itself I was a little disappointed—it looked tamer than I had been led to expect; and I am inclined to think that the astonishing effect of the view depends partly on the magical suddenness with which it bursts upon the traveller, and partly on the associations connected with the place. But I am not going to disparage this world-renowned prospect, for in fact I enjoyed it exceedingly—spending half an hour feasting upon it, and in forming a good photograph on the brain, which memory must afterwards from time to time "develop." It is from this point that Mahomet, after gazing for the first time on the enchanting scene, is said to have turned back, and a pious reflection that there was but one paradise designed for him, and he was resolved not to take him in this world.

"We ascended the hill-side," says M. Martineau, "and thence saw a picture which appeared as if it must melt away in its own beauty. The rich yellow city, with its forty minarets, springs up from the midst of the glorious verdure which looks as thick as a forest for miles round. Verdure springs up within the city too; and a village here, a mosque there, and then a bridge, or a reach of road or water, peeps out from amidst the surrounding wood, so that the intermingling of city and forest is most tempting to the fancy, as well as delicious to the eye. Beyond the oasis lies the plain, and beyond the yellow plain the tinted hills on every side: their hues soft and repressed, as if to set off the brilliancy of the gem that lies in the midst. I never saw anything like this again—anything nearly so sweet and gay."

It is easy to see that this island of verdure in the desert is a precious treasure, its existence entirely to the fertilising action of the water. It is the bountiful river that bestows this oasis, and its flowers, of corn and wine and oil, giving succulence to full 200,000 human beings, besides much cattle. Without the Barada these excellent gardens and orchards and corn fields, filling a circuit of near thirty miles, would shrivel up into dust, and the plain of Damascus now teeming with life and beauty, would become like the iron-bound Sahara that lay behind us. It was with a just appreciation of this beneficent river that the old Greeks named it the Golden Flowing.

Like Maundrell—"We continued a good while upon the precipice to take a view of the city, and indeed it is a hard matter to leave a station which presents you so charming a landscape. It exhibits the paradise below as a most fair and desirable place, and yet will hardly suffer you to stay away to the city: thus at once inviting you to go to the pleasure which it seems to promise and deterring you from it by the beauty of the prospect."

Descending the rocky hill-side to the suburb of Salahiyyeh we got among green lanes carpeted by dense foliage, and along these we rode about a mile to the city. The walls on either hand were so high that we could see little of what lay beyond, but an occasional opening showed us a varied mass of rich vegetation, with tangled roses and copious fountains. These garden-walls are of rather unusual construction; they had attracted the attention of Maundrell, and his description of them is as applicable now as then. "They are built," he says "of great pieces of earth, made in the fashion of bricks and hardened in the sun. In their dimensions they are two yards long each, and somewhat more than one broad, and half yard thick. Two of these are placed edgewise one upon another make a cheap expedient, and in this dry country a durable wall." Entering the town we rode about a mile through narrow slippery lanes and badways, to Demetri's hotel, "in the street which is called Straight." We found it a quiet comfortable house, with an open court in the centre containing a square tank surrounded by orange and other trees, in the style characteristic of Damascus. We lost no time in obtaining a guide (a smart Irish lad named Frank, who had been employed as interpreter in the Crimea) under whose pilotage we went first to the British Consulate and left our names. The house had a fine court with a marble fountain surrounded by trees and flowers. Mr. Wrench, the acting consul, was kind enough to send his cavalcade to Abd-el-Kader to say that we would be glad to pay our respects to him. He at once gave us a word that he would receive us immediately. We accordingly went straight to his house and conversed with him about half an hour through the consul's interpreter. He is a fine old man, with keen intelligent eyes, and a mild expression of face, breaking occasionally into a pleasant smile. After a few introductory phrases we expressed our pleasure that he had done so much to protect Christians in the previous year; and we ventured to say that English people generally could not fail to admire him for his conduct on that occasion. He said he wished he was better deserving of their good opinion. In the course of conversation he quoted some Arab proverbs; for example, when we expressed our admiration of the plucky way in which his Algerian followers had defended the Christians in the streets and escorted them to places of safety, when the Turkish soldiers looked on with indifference or actually joined the murderers, he remarked—"A few words will be that a soldier is worthy of his flag." He said some pretty things also about the advantages of travel, on remarking that English people were much addicted to roaming in foreign countries. He is believed to have been the means of saving many lives during the June massacres; and we were told that the stout old fellow that brought us off was one of the most active under him. Abd-el-Kader is a very religious man, spending much time in the mosques in praying and reading the Koran, and teaching children; and I believe he joined the pilgrims to Mecca in the present year.

After this we visited the Christian quarter of the city, now a heap of ruins. Besides the carcasses of the consulate we had to get a Turkish soldier to conduct us, as people are not allowed to walk among the ruins by themselves. It was a pitiable sight to see the wreck of the beautiful structures—marble columns and fountains, intricate carvings, and many forms of exquisite architecture—all begrimed and buried under shapeless rubbish. From this melancholy scene of fanatical devastation we passed out of the city by the eastern gate and walked round the walls on the south side. From a mound of rubbish outside the gate we obtained a tolerable view over the town. Portions of the neighbouring wall are evidently ancient, being of Roman construction; houses are built over in some places, and their projecting windows are just such as Paul must have escaped by. Towards the west end of the city we got into a large burying ground, full of neat little grave stones, provided with hollows containing water for the nourishment of bunches of roses and myrtle. Many women were sitting among the graves—some lamenting and some gossiping. We inspected a few of the bazaars on our way back, full of interesting sights, which however, I shall not seek to describe.

May 10th.—We spent a pleasant day roaming about Damascus, making ourselves better acquainted with the beautiful samples of Syrian architecture as seen in mosques, tombs, and khans; also with the characteristic manufactures and wares of the bazaars, and with the rich and luxurious style of arranging and decorating the better class of private houses. All these things, which make Damascus such an interesting study, are well described in easily accessible books, and I need not here dwell upon them. We began the day's work by a visit to the stores of a well-known dealer in curiosities, commonly called Abou Antika, from whose varied collection of arms and beautiful works in metal, &c., we made a few purchases, and thence adjourned to the bazaars, and while among them we got a peep into the great mosque, a large and splendid pile, once a Christian Church, and before that probably a pagan temple. In the course of our ramble we passed outside the walls and visited the house and gardens of Mijuel, a leading sheikh of the tribe of Bedouins, whose wife is an Englishman, commonly known as Mrs. Digby. She was not at home, but her husband had gone to Palmyra to attend upon her husband, who had got wounded in a recent fight. The housekeeper (also an English woman) obligingly showed us over the garden and principal rooms of the house. It was a large and fine establishment, exhibiting (as might be expected) many marks of European taste among the more Oriental facies. The garden seemed very much to our taste (as is generally the case about Damascus), but the rich foliage of the fruit trees, and the masses of roses and other flowers, interspersed with fountains, cascades, and sinuous rills of water for irrigation, made up a pleasing picture. The housekeeper gave us some interesting scraps of information about the massacre of the Christians. For some time past there was a growing hatred and irritation between the Moslems and Christians; the former (he said) were in the habit of making small crosses, throwing them about, and stamping and spitting on them. The Christian complained to the Governor, who ordered some Moslem boys to sweep streets in the Christian quarter,—a great degradation in their eyes. Bits of paper used to be scattered about calling upon the Moslems to be on their guard as the Christians were to kill them all. In this state of affairs the outbreak between the Druzes and Maronites in the mountains added fuel to the excitement; and when the surviving Christians from Hasbeia and other villages fled to Damascus for refuge, this seemed to have brought on the catastrophe. Our informant happened to be in the bazaars on the afternoon when the massacre began. She observed an unusual commotion among the shops and those were being hastily shut up, but she did not know without knowing what was amiss. Tidings of what was going on followed, however, and from the roof of the house she saw the Christian quarter on fire in several places. Murder and pillage went on for three days, and the fires were not extinguished for a week. The soldiers made an attempt to quell the mob; they in fact joined the plunderers, and a party of them murdered a missionary while professing to guard him to a place of safety. This behaviour of the military encouraged the people to further excesses and induced many to aid the tumult who at first had stood aloof. The housekeeper saw the women of the neighbouring villages, who had brought milk, eggs, and other produce, into town in the morning, and who, having done their marketing, had gone home, returning again in the afternoon, and by-and-by proceeded homeward laden with booty.

When the whole was over, and the authorities began to bestir themselves, these people took alarm, and threw their plunder out into the roads and into the river, so as to destroy the evidence of their guilt. Many fugitives sought refuge in Sheikh Mijuel's house; but some not thinking themselves safe went away again and were killed; at length the Sheikh interfered and took a number under his protection. The housekeeper expressed her belief that the Moslems did not kill women or girls; but they killed young boys even in their mother's laps; girls they carried off, and many of these have never been recovered. So she did not think that the Druzes had much to do with this massacre as she mentioned indeed some cases where they had interfered to protect people. When the Turkish authorities came to inquire into the matter several of the superior military officers of Damascus (and I believe the Pasha also) were condemned to be shot, and many of the soldiers and common people were hanged. It is evident that Damascus has received a terrible blow; Christians were the chief artificers of the place, and without them its prosperity for the present is gone. The silk manufacture is extinguished. The bazaars of the silversmiths, and other workers in metals, are almost deserted; the handicrafts that used to make the place famous will seek a far sadder trade will find new channels; and I think it very doubtful if Damascus will ever again be what it was,—at all events while under Turkish rule.

After our visit to the house of Sheikh Mijuel we were shown over the dwelling of a wealthy Jew. It was a splendid piece of domestic architecture, with a large and fine hall, and a room of decoration, but the general effect was sumptuous, and at the same time light, airy, and cool. But on its beautiful tiled pavements, marble fountains, walls inlaid with coloured stones mother of pearl and glass, arabesque ceilings, and all the other fine things in this stately mansion, I must not expatiate. Mr. Hill and I went next to the castle, and, after an interview with the commanding-officer (involving cigars and coffee), we were permitted to ascend to the battlements, whence we had a magnificent view of the city and gardens under the warm colouring of the setting sun. In a neighbouring café, overhanging the river, we had a cup of sherbet with the intelligent young officer who had accompanied us and lastly, on our way back to the hotel, we passed through the soldiers' bazaar to view the great place tree, nearly forty feet in girth, which is one of the most worthy sights of Damascus.
